"The they behold our vowihits! Frace!

"It was to be the transport to the while, detect their motions from their light coats.

Poke suggested that they were phentom wolves and declared they were all white.

All the fearful stories that I had ever read came coursing through my brain. I had ever read came course the second out and ravished by these proviers, and heard the ahrick of the child theory from the sleigh by its fear-moddened motion, and many an old dream re-shaped in my mind the terrors of nights of fever. Were we to be tired out by their deviliah patience? Was one gang to relieve another until we wearily fell into their hot tainted jaws, thus to be buried into oblivion.

I shouted in the hope that some one might hear me; but what good to shout in that midulght forest? I heard a voice—it was Poke saying his prayers. I listened deroully, but could offer none myself.

When he had finished, I called to him. He ams wered faintly—

"Fire your pustol; do try, it may bring some help, even if it does not kill."

"I will try," answered Poke.

There was a momentary pause, sed then the sharp erack of a pistol was collowed by the singing of a bullet close by my ear. By the flash I saw Poke, hatleas, hanging on to the topmost breach of a young peens, that bent with him like as orange tree under a heavy load of fruit. With the report of the pistol there was a scramble among the voracious crew at our feet; but they did not go away permanently, and were back in a moment.

"Fire the other way—point it down."

Bang! sounded the pistol, and I heard a themp on the ground, as the poor fellew threw away the now uselsse weapon.

"Hold on, Poke; take heart, my dear boy,"
"Oh, fit is easy comply to say take heart, but when the tree bends a little more than usual, I am within a foot of these hell-hounds. Oh, dear!" "There they come; I see them—three torohes and men and dogs."
"God bless them!" I heard Poke say, faistly. But he ran die is whirivind up the pass,
And is eight to wives behind — Massalay.

"Mike, what kind of a night would this be for fire-shooting?" said the Doctor to that meditatire Nimrod, who was busy sewing up a moceasin by the light of the camp-fire, after a week of travel.

"So, ao," replied Mike, without looking up.
"I am going, I think."
No answer. Mike put on the mended moceasin, and drew off the other.
"Do you think we can kill anything?"
"Pope," replied Mike.
"Uome, Charlie, let us try it for a little while." "God bless them." I heard Poke say, faistly,
I was afreld be was fainting. "Hold en, Poke," I said, and screaming to the men, I called them to hurry. On they came, at a run, I recognized them as they came up with their torches flashing through the woods; they were taken and fits men. He had been in our camp only the day previous, and told us he had a shape farm in this neighborhood. "Quick, this way," I shouted—"the wolves! the colves!" He answared me. How blessed a thing was the sound of a haman voice in our necessity. They came under the trees we were in. thing was the sound of a numer to trees we were in.

"Hallon there! where are you? where are the wolves?" he shouled in his stantorian tones.

"Dare's de sheep I'm bin hus the all dis breaded aight," exclaimed a negro, who accompalled Jackson on his search.

I looked around, and there was Jackson's hig flock of sheep, staring blandly at us up in the trees, and at their mance, by turn. It had been their ayes we had seen in the darkness.

"Uome, Charie, let us try it for a little while."

This was all a ruse on the part of Poke, in order to make Mike think jour great hust was an unpremedizated sifar, and thereby increase the glory of killing so much game. It had been arranged between us during the day, that we would try fire husting sturing that night. It promised to be a cloudy night, which was of great advantage, as it unwested the game from seeing stything of the uniters, sad at the same time rendered their eyes more reflective when exposed to the torch hight. We had even gone so far as to make our pitch-pise torches, and the whole preparation was compliede. It was a party of two—the. Doctor and myself. There would be rather more interest in getting the game alone; and beside that, Mike's opinion on fire-shooting was well known, and we knew that he would not go with us—ac constant a hunter would be rather more interest in getting the game alone; and besidishat, Mike's opinion on fire-shooting was well known, and we knew that he would not go with us—so constant a hunter-sporced po primitive a share as the one we proposed. The negroes we did not want, for the lewer in a party the better. So, one of us taking a gua, and the obser carrying a torch, we lett the camp.

The beys were chuckling together as they saw us go, the dogs hewled because they could not go with us, and Kite gave one of his expressive coughs, that said as plainly as words, "Now for it."

We were soon outside of the glare of the camp fire, the little creek was crossed, and our toren flashed brightly on the taper tranks of the prine trees, the cumbing-vines, and the broadlesfed plants that grew by the poels of water. There was no wind, and, walking in the pina woods, there was no sound. Once in a long while a sand-hill crass, disturbed in his wanderings, would be seen stalking away, with his red-head high in the sir, like a sentry on duty, or the audean motion of the under brush would tell us that some one of the many har lequins of the wood, that gambel most when men do sleep, had fled from this quasand spectacle of a morning light. But no idear rewarded our search; no bear showed us his heavy cost.

Think of the deer; one buck will well pay us.

Fudge! if there was no one to laugh at us, I would have turned back long ago. Give me the gun and you take the light.

Accordingly we changed positions—I going ahead, arrying the torch before me, in such a manner that it would throw the light ahead as much as possible, and none on our persons, and the Doctor received the gun, and took my place directly behind and shaded by my person. The light had become still darker, and a misty rain commenced failing. We had left the pinew woods, stier walking a couple of miles, and had come into a grove to lower timber. The long mess drooped in curtains, the clor of magnosian burdened the air, and every minute a dehser copse would force us to turn saide from our route. driest copes would force as to turn and from our route.
